MoMath Has Hosted Tens of Thousands of Title 1 Students Since Opening

(New York, NY -September 19, 2024) – The National Museum of Mathematics (MoMath) announced that New York City Title 1 Schools will be offered free field trips this school year. Field trips can accommodate over 500 students daily, with educator-led activities spread throughout the course of the day. Title 1 schools are schools with a high proportion of children from low-income families; resources are provided in an effort to create a fair, equitable, high-quality education and to close educational achievement gaps. MoMath has hosted tens of thousands of students from Title I schools since opening in 2012.

MoMath is located at a temporary pop-up site, “MoMath on Fifth,” at 225 Fifth Avenue on 23rd and Fifth Avenue in advance of moving to a larger site, expected to open in 2026. MoMath’s interactive exhibits highlight the role of mathematics in everyday life. The dynamic exhibits, galleries and programs are designed to spark curiosity, and reveal the wonders of mathematics.

“MoMath is committed to offering engaging mathematical experiences to students of all backgrounds,” said Cindy Lawrence, CEO and Executive Director, National Museum of Mathematics. “We are delighted that the generosity of donors allows us to bring students from disadvantaged backgrounds to experience the wonder and beauty of mathematics, preparing them for a successful academic future and positioning them for success in their professional careers.”
